Mr. Blaine's opinion of the McKinley bill is unique and picturesque. In order to get the drift of his ideas you must read between the lines of his letter to Mr. Frye. He is a diplomat by both nature and profession, and knows better than most men how to pay a graceful compliment and fling a sarcasm in the same breath.

The bill is in many respects a wise one, he says, but it is a political blunder. He is pleased with some of its provisions, but the thing will not work and must be abandoned. It is in accordance with the policy of protection, but if he might be allowed to make a suggestion he would like to remark that it fails to protect. It is a great and glorious measure, quite worthy of the patriotism of the republic party, but unless it is killed in Congress it will knock that party higher than Gilead's kite. It guards the financial interests of the country and is therefore to be commended, but it closes every foreign market to American products and is therefore to be condemned without stint.

The outlook is that Mr. Blaine is preparing a dose of strychnine for the bill and hopes to deliver the remains to the Cooper and the undertaker. It might not be policy to say that, so he praises it faintly and with so many double entendres that you can swear he believes in it or doesn't believe in it just as you please. You pay your money and you take your choice.

We are still looking for Mr. Blaine's conversion to a sound democratic policy. He stands trembling on the brink, but may soon leap into the flood and be baptized in the rolling Jordan of democracy. The grand issue between the two parties is a trade. "Give us the whole world to trade with," cry the democrats. "Let us shut the whole world out and chew each other up," answers the republicans.

Mr. Blaine is trying to open South American ports. That is good politics and good economy, but it is the democratic, not the republican policy. We remind Mr. Blaine of a very interesting old saying: "It is never to late to mend." N. Y. Herald.

Death of Mr. Jas. G. Root. On Monday morning April 22nd 1890 the Angel of Death came and with only a few minutes warning took the devoted wife and mother Mrs. Miro D. Root. Mrs. Root was a member of the Presbyterian church at Chlorport, a true Christian in every sense of the word and best loved by those who knew her best. Hardly had the heart wounds made by her death begun to heal over when again the messenger came to the already bereaved family this time taking the dear, feeble, gray haired, father, Jas. G. Root. Mr. Root never fully recovered from the shock and grief occasioned by the death of his devoted wife and often expressed a willingness to go and be with her. He was taken ill Thursday morning July 3rd but was not considered seriously ill until evening. He seemed to suffer little but gradually grew weaker until about 3 p. m. Sunday July 6th when he ceased to breathe. He leaves one son and three daughters who will long miss their indulgent father.

Jas. G. Root was born Jan. 1st, 1818 at Rootstown O. While quite young his father died and he went to Cincinnati in search of congenial employment. Having a fondness for machinery he soon became a first class engineer and for several years was engineer on some of the largest boats then plying between Cincinnati and New Orleans. In 1843 he was married to Miss Mrs. D. B. Root and several years later left the river since which time he has been interested in saw milling. During the past eighteen years he has been identified with saw mill interests of this country.

Mr. Root was a great reader and could converse well and fluently on most subjects.

A Taste of Kentucky Bluegrass. In the course of the ten days that followed the last ten days of May, I had an opportunity to taste it pretty well and my mind has had a grossy flavor ever since. I had an opportunity to see the restless and restless nature of our in a more grossy and beneficial mood than I have ever before seen it in. Its savageness and acridness gone, no thought now but submission to the land and wants of man. I afterwards saw the prairie of Illinois and the vast level stretches of farming country of Northern Ohio and Indiana, but these lands were nowhere quite so human, quite so beautiful, or quite so productive as the Bluegrass region. One likes to see the earth's surface lifted up and undulating a little as it heaved and swelled with emotion, it suggests more life, and at the same time the sense of repose is greater. There is no repose in prairie, it is stagnation, it is a dead level. Those immense stretches of flat land pain the eye, as if all life and expression had gone from the face of the earth. There is just unevenness enough in the Bluegrass region to give nobility and variety to the landscape. From almost any given point one commands broad and extensive views—immense fields of wheat or barley, or hemp, or grass or clover, or of wood and pastures—John Barrow's in July County.

COULD WAVE

Would be very acceptable at this particular time, but in the absence of the wave the next best thing for sweetening humanity to do is to come to our refrigerating establishment and buy one of our Coldwave Coats, or Coat and Vest, and then you can bid defiance to old Sol. We have sold an immense amount of these goods this summer. By special arrangement with the "clerk of the weather" we were early posted as to the weather this summer. We accordingly made arrangements for an immense supply of hot-weather garments, and we have to-day the only complete assortment of these necessary garments in the city. We have them in all the popular fabrics and many styles and colorings not to be found in any other house. Our prices are right. Our stock of Light-weight Cassimere and Worsted Suits offers many desirable styles at rock-bottom prices.

Original Package Mischief.

The mischievous consequences of the Supreme Court's original package decision brought to public notice almost daily by the newspapers.

Liquor dealers in prohibition States find it easy to evade the local law, and when any attempt is made to prosecute them the courts feel bound to decide in their favor. In this way the Statelaw is practically annulled. Indignation meets those who have been held, protests voiced and appeals to the courts made by the people; but all in vain.

The citizens of an Iowa town have even resolved to take the law into their own hands and mete out summary punishment to any original package offender. In Kansas a public meeting declared that "the people are a higher judiciary than even the Supreme Court," and the Lieutenant Governor proclaimed that the laws of the State were paramount to a decision of the Supreme Court. Of course all that is as wrong as it is rash and foolish. But it shows what extent popular feeling has been wrought up on the subject.

It is evident that more serious consequences than any yet reported will follow unless a remedy is soon provided. There are but two practicable remedies—one lies with Congress and the other with the Supreme Court.

Congress has already moved in the matter by taking up a bill giving its permission to the States to legislate. To this bill a constitutional objection has been raised and will doubtless be urged. It is contended that as the Supreme Court has decided that the power in question belongs to Congress and not the States it cannot be delegated or transferred to the States by any act of Congress; that the respective powers of Congress and the States are defined and fixed by the constitution, and that to concede to Congress the right to add to the powers of a State is to make that body paramount to the constitution.

Whatever reason there may be in this view it is not likely to receive the sanction of the Supreme Court, which must be the final arbiter of the question. That tribunal, from the time of Chief Justice Marshall down to the present, has repeatedly admitted that the power of Congress it would be perfectly competent for the States to legislate on certain matters within the domain of interstate or even foreign commerce. As early as 1798 such consent was granted by Congress in the case of State pilotage laws, and in the original package opinion itself the Supreme Court suggested that Congress might authorize the States to deal with the liquor traffic through interstate commerce. It is not likely, therefore, that the bill pending in Congress would be held invalid by the Supreme Court though its operation would be delayed a good while by the controversy.

By far the best and most desirable remedy lies with the Court itself—reversal of its own ruling. It has stripped the States of the greatest and most salutary power that belongs to a commonwealth—the police power to legislate for the morals, health and safety of the people. That the Court has made a serious error in this case is believed not only by three of its own members but by the ablest constitutional lawyers in the country. We think that even the majority of the judges could be convinced of their error on a rehearing of the case, and if a decision would be rendered restoring to the States the sovereignty guaranteed them by the constitution.—N. Y. Herald.
